Darrell Wade, CEO of Intrepid Travel and current Ivanhoe parent, co-founded the organisation in 1989 to create an alternative to mainstream tourism, offering small groups the chance to experience local cultures at a grass-roots level. The company has since expanded worldwide and now takes 80,000 travellers to more than 90 countries each year with revenues of $130 million.

As well as a passion for travel, Darrell has a long-standing interest in social and environmental concerns that has formed an integral part of his company's 'responsible travel' philosophy. Most recently, he has turned his attention to how the travel industry contributes to the problem of climate change, and in particular the growing impact of carbon emissions from passenger aircraft.

In November 2006, Darrell was a guest of the Australian Conservation Foundation at a private dinner with former US Vice-President and climate change campaigner Al Gore. Intrepid Travel hopes to be a Carbon Neutral company by 2010 and funds sustainable energy projects, tree planting, waste recycling and other activities that contribute to the reduction of carbon emissions.
